

Stephanie Azahar

Stephanie Azahar has been involved in competitive gymnastics for the past ten years, and her experience in the sport has contributed greatly to the person she is today, as it has taught her the value of confidence, good work ethic, and determination. Stephanie is currently a student at the Georgia Institute of Technology, where she hopes to continue practicing and competing in gymnastics through Tech's club team. She loves participating in community service opportunities, and in the past has worked with organizations such as Habitat for Humanity and Constructores Para Cristo. Stephanie is studying architecture, and hopes to one day use her knowledge to help contribute to the development or restoration of buildings that can serve to strengthen communities on a large or small scale.
